0930: Lessons from a Radical Model on WGDR, Goddard College Community Radio, with host Jackie Batten: WGDR has a long history of youth engagement. Young people have been coming to the station for on-air broadcast training for decades. However, in 2013 with the rise of Community Based Learning and Project Based Learning in our listening area schools, WGDR decided to expand its youth programming to include Indie Kingdom, a youth radio training program that partners a radio producer with an educator and their students to produce broadcast quality radio stories while meeting state educational standards. Many schools in VT (and nationwide) are aiming to foster a learning environment of authenticity, adult world connections, applied learning and active exploration. With the power of story and the tools of broadcast journalism, Indie Kingdom sets out to train a new generation of media makers. On this episode of Lessons from a Radical Model, we'll feature one of these Indie Kingdom youth produced radio stories. Immigration in Vermont is a bilingual story produced in collaboration with the Advanced Placement Spanish class at Montpelier High School in Montpelier, VT. Archive 06-28-2017

1400: Conversation Earth: Our ecosystems contribute tens of trillions of dollars to our economy every year, but " as L. Hunter Lovins notes, At present we re losing every major ecosystem on the planet What are we doing to ourselves?...We have the intelligence to make different choices. In this interview, she outlines those choices and shares how they benefit businesses and the planet. Hunter Lovins co-authored the best-selling book, Natural Capitalism, with Paul Hawken and Amory Lovins. One of the biggest challenges to living sustainably, says Lovins, is our belief we can meet non-material needs through the purchase of material things. We keep spending all this money, and we aren't getting any happier. Wouldn't you rather have more time than more stuff? She observes that we all have a profound hunger for authenticity, human connection, love. We recorded this interview in 2004, but offer it here because the concepts are as relevant today. 1430: Conversation Earth: One of the ways that radical ideas become more mainstream is when those of us who hold them aren't afraid to speak about them. This thought has guided much of journalism professor Robert Jensen's work. His writing and speaking often focus on the news that we live in an economy that is based on the destruction of places all over world. In this 2015 interview, Jensen explains what he calls an unprecedented set of threats to the possibility of ongoing, large-scale, human habitation of the planet. Jensen takes a critical approach to media and power. Much of his work has focused on pornography, a radical feminist critique of sexuality and men's violence, and white privilege and institutionalized racism. He has written: If there is to be a decent future, we have to give up on the imperial fantasy of endless power, the capitalist fantasy of endless growth, the technological fantasy of endless comfort we should mourn the world that these systems have created and search for something better. Systems that celebrate domination are death cults, not the basis for societies striving for justice and sustainability. Archive 08-01-2016
