1400: Conversation Earth: Are we all bystanders when it comes to responding rationally to the serious environmental crises faced by our civilization? How is our behavior shaped by that of those around us? We've all heard of the bystander effect in which a large number of people stand by and do nothing to help someone in trouble. According to social norms theory, misperceptions of the attitudes or behaviors of our peers can cause the expression of problem behavior and the inhibition of healthy action. In this episode, psychologist Dr. Alan Berkowitz shares the latest thinking about how the presence of other people affects our behavior, including our denial about critical threats to human civilization. Berkowitz founded and edited The Report on Social Norms. He authored RESPONSE ABILITY: A Complete Guide to Bystander Intervention in 2009. Berkowitz has been a key figure in the development of Social Norms Theory, and consults on the subjects of bystander behavior, substance abuse, sexual assault, hazing, gender, and diversity. This conversation was recorded in the Arizona desert in 2008, but is just now being shared for the first time. Archive 07-10-2017 Podcaster's website ; Underwriter website

1430: Conversation Earth: Would you be surprised to learn that human beings today have an impairment that prevents most of us from making the wisest decisions that affect our future? Frustrated at the abysmal rate of adoption when seatbelts were introduced into cars in the 1960s, Jack Alpert quit his job as an automotive engineer to study human decision-making. In this episode he sheds interesting light on how we gather and process information to predict future outcomes and make related decisions. Jack founded the Stanford Knowledge Integration Laboratory while doing post graduate work at Stanford University in 1978. Today the lab is an independent non-profit research foundation. Aside from his automotive engineering and cognitive science work, Jack was on three early tech start-up teams " Bananafish software, Conductus and Cisco Systems. 1900: Peace Talks Radio: The Series on Peacemaking and Nonviolent Conflict Resolution: Reducing Poverty, Promoting Peace: "The frustrations, hostility, and anger generated by abject poverty cannot sustain peace in any society. For building stable peace, we must find ways to provide opportunities for people to lead decent lives." - 2006 Nobel Peace Prize Winner Muhammad Yunus (pictured here) On October 13, 2006, the Nobel Peace Prize was awarded in equal parts to Muhammad Yunus and the Grameen Bank for their efforts to create grass-roots economic and social development with micro-credit programs. The Nobel Committee wrote "lasting peace can not be achieved unless large population groups find ways in which to break out of poverty. Micro-credit is one such means." This edition of Peace Talks Radio will explain how micro-credit and other programs work to eliminate poverty and how development and peace-building are related. Carol Boss is host. Our guests are Coralie Bryant, co-author of the book "Reducing Poverty, Building Peace" and Heidi Topp Brooks, an activist with the organization known as RESULTS working on ending global hunger and poverty. Excerpts from an interview and speech by Muhammad Yunus are also featured. Newscast Compatible. Archive 02-23-2018 Podcaster's website ; Underwriter website
